

'Australia's favourite thinker' Sunday Telegraph

HUGH MACKAY

introduces us to the

THE INNER SELF

and the joy of discovering who we really are

Drawing on a lifetime of pioneering research, one of Australia's most respected social psychologists explores the ways we hide from the truth about ourselves.

For over six decades, social researcher and bestselling author Hugh Mackay has examined and chronicled the way Australians live. Now, Mackay returns to his psychology roots in this powerful and important book.

We all have a constructed 'personal identity'. Through stories, research and theory, Mackay explores our 'top 20' hiding places – from addiction to materialism, busyness to social media, nostalgia to victimhood – and empowers us to delve deeper and face the most searching question of all: "Who am I, really?"

Mackay's explanation for our evasiveness is simple but profound: we fear the demands of love. Exposing the great paradox of human nature, Mackay argues that while love brings out the best in us, we don't always want our best brought out. We don't always want to be good.

From the critical mind of What Makes Us Tick and The Good Life, The Inner Self is Mackay's most insightful and resonant work to date.

*'When we are more accepting of ourselves, we become more accepting of others.
When we acknowledge our own failings and frailties, we become more tolerant of others.'*

Adapting the musical 'theme-and-variations' structure to the written word The Question of Love centres on the marriage of Richard and Freya, who on the surface, are a perfect couple. Exploring parallel themes to The Inner Self, it is a novel of stunning originality.
